

Subject: Have you ever lost a law suit?
From: Rik Munson <blowintough@att.net>
Date: 9/19/2019, 11:37 AM
To: napacrimlaw@comcast.net

I don't mean summary judgement or verdict. I mean like as in "It was here just a minute ago. I'm sure it must be laying around here some place?"

Hello Mike, this is Rik Munson,

I'm sure it sounds a little unusual but that's that case I have in Texas. It's about to hit the fan. 704 F.3d 406 Not to be believed thereafter... and Napa plays into it but only sideways.

That's not why I'm contacting you per se.

I recently returned from an unexpected overnight at the Queen and was sleeping in my bed at home when I heard strange voices across the hall, which is where my office is. When I got out of bed and opened the door three armed people in flack vests were in my office. One in the door way and two inside browsing around. The one in the doorway turned around to confront me and in the absence of a warrant I ordered them out of my office. Apparently they had come as a force of seven with arms drawn?? and three of them burst through my son Tyler's door while the other four appeared at the front door and enter there claiming authority by virtue of county probation.

There are six people living in this home and only one, Andrew Curtis, has a formal probation agreement.

One of the people living here is three years old. He's been here since he was 15 days old and he hopes to be four next month.

These people waiving their guns around were talking trash about marijuana and making threats of child abduction over a branch off a cannabis plant hanging in a bathroom you can only get to through my office.

The probationer is the father of the child and his mother is my significant other. He moved here from Martinez. The terms of his probation only forbid the use of illegal drugs as his offense was ordering a couple of items of merchandise using someone else credit card. He can't be in possession of someone else ID. Pretty stupid but relatively benign. Napa County apparently thinks they can change the terms of his probation based upon their own internal policy and come barging in here in the most unacceptable fashion like it was training day. They actually had someone at Andy's probation meeting today, allegedly from the public defenders office, to tell him they could play this shit. My view of the world is that his express terms only prohibit the use of illegal drugs and his search terms are limited to his person and his immediate area... which is where they found him.

Andy has a year left. He has no prior criminal record of any kind. What can be done to terminate his probation early and/or stop these morons form pulling that Nazi home invasion nonsense again?

Thanks Mike,

Have you ever lost a law suit?

925-349-8348

--

Rik Munson